Hi John,

I have gotten about five calls in the past two days from an attorney in Albany named Dale Pager, who is working for Nxivm. She wants me to call her because she has a "question". I have not returned her calls.

She called me in October and told me that someone had been using my Nxivm account (whatever that is) and had been posting derogatory comments on some blog on some website of NXIVM. She said she could tell by the way I responded that it likely wasn't me and they had ways of finding out where an IP address was from and this one wasn't from where I live. She wanted to know if I had given my password out to anyone, if I was close to anyone there and may have given it to them, what my password was ??? (like I'd give it to her anyway).

I haven't logged into one of their websites in many years, have burned my materials from them, and have no idea what my password or log in info. was. This is ridiculous. I asked an attorney about it and they said it sounded like a fishing expedition for information. Dale Pager said in October that she'd tell "them" that I didn't need to hear from them again, yet here I am now, hearing from them again ...

I have not been involved with them in close to ten years and have no personal contact with anyone in the group anymore. It's feeling kind of like harassment and intimidation on their part. I haven't done anything they might sue me over and I certainly don't have any money. I am still recovering financially from all the "success" I achieved as a result of being affiliated with them. Someone told me today they thought there was a federal case coming up and this attorney might be trying to find out who might be brought in as witnesses against them.

Who the hell am I to them?? I wasn't part of their "inner circle", though I was brought in by one I'd consider to have been. I have no idea what they could possibly think I know besides what everyone else knows and what I personally experienced.

Has anyone else reported this kind of activity? Any advice? Anybody you would recommend I contact about this? Please don't post anything about this on the blog because if they aren't calling anyone else, they will know where it came from.
